HONGKONG, MAY 6, 1867.

The avowed "reformation" of a notorious street-gambler who figured in our police reports of Saturday, is the most comical nonsense in connexion with this subject which we have seen for a long time. That any Chinaman should look upon gambling as what we designate a vice, in abstaining from which he is performing a virtuous and self-denying act, is about as likely as that a cat should awake to a perception of something which ought to be morally odious to her in stealing milk. The cat learns, very often, not to steal the milk, having arrived at a comprehension of the fact that, through some mysterious law of the higher powers, stealing milk leads to a pain in the back; and in precisely the same way, the Chinese coolie whose lot is cast in in Hongkong, finds out that through some mysterious whim of his English rulers he will, if caught gambling, be put in prison or fined. His nature, however, being higher than those of the lower animals, and his mental faculties more acute, he perceives that the thing to avoid is not gambling, but being found out. He is thus put in a foolish and unnecessary manner in opposition to the laws of his Government, accustomed to be in such an attitude of hostility to them, and encouraged in this way to commit numberless other offences. Whether or not the Chinaman's gambling propensities are the source of much which is miserable in his lot in life or not, is a question about which a great deal might be said on both sides; whether or not those propensities are "sinful" is also a subject which might be argued two ways, but these are not the practical questions which ought to be considered by a Government in enacting laws or carrying out police regulations. The questions for the Hongkong Government in connexion with this gambling matter ought to be merely of a practical nature. Is the continuance of gambling amongst the lower orders of the Chinese, or the continual atmosphere of law-breaking, in which they are made to live at present, most detrimental to the interests of the colony? Granting that it is desirable to reform the habits of the Chinese under our sway as far as that is reasonably practicable, is their reformation in this matter of gambling a case in which we may expect to produce a moral influence upon the minds we can reach? Granting everything which the opponents of gambling in the abstract could say, are we called upon to go to trouble and expense to make Hongkong a reformatory for the Province of Quangtung? Directly we begin to ask questions of a practical character, answers which completely condemn the present policy of the Government in connexion with gambling, force themselves upon the attention.

A meeting of the Legislative Council must be called very soon, and we believe that a Bill on this subject of gambling will be brought before it. What the nature and provisions of that Bill may be we do not know; but we fear that it is not designed to put the treatment of gambling upon a reasonable footing. We fear the Bill will prove to be designed to put down gambling instead of to let the practice run its own course, provided it does not lead to the prejudice of any colonial interest or endanger the peace of the town. Now, what it would be desirable to have made clear, in the first instance, is whether the present policy in connection with native gambling pursued in Hongkong, and the still more repressive measures which may be apprehended, are the offspring of the present local Government or are measures dictated from the Colonial Office. Amongst the difficulties which beset, both a writer, commenting on public affairs in a colony like this, and independent members of the Legislative Council who might wish to recommend any change of policy, is that in all cases the public is left in a good deal of uncertainty as to whether given measures are children of the GOVERNOR for the time being, or orphans of whom he is made the unwilling guardian. There can be very little doubt of the fact that in a great many cases in the past, when colonial governors have been passionately censured for doing this or that, and people have been vainly speculating on what mental obliquity led them to act as they did in defiance of obvious considerations, they all the while have been most unwilling instruments carrying out the inflexible mandates of the Imperial Government, issued very likely in consequence of erroneous impressions concerning the place to which they are sent. Injudicious measures threatened by a governor on his own motion, and injudicious orders transmitted to him from home, of the objections to which he was fully aware, would have to be met by the inhabitants of a colony desirous of bringing whatever constitutional influence they might possess, to bear on the subject, in totally different ways. In the course of the debate or conversation which may arise on the draft of the gambling ordinance, whatever it may be which is to be brought forward shortly, it is very much to be hoped that it will become apparent whether the GOVERNOR or the Colonial Office is the great enemy to the cash game of which the Chinese coolies are so fond. Of course, assuming that it is not the Governor, but the Colonial Office which is bent upon effecting a moral reformation in the Chinese mind on the subject of playing for money, and for what impressions are worth, we may say that our impression is the Colonial Office has originated this pious crusade,—no one could even then expect the GOVERNOR to say anything which in express terms would repudiate the Colonial Office policy. Still he might very easily put the discussion on this subject on a more convenient basis by letting the Council know from the first his views on the general principle of dealing with the vices of the fluctuating Chinese population temporarily under our control in this island. At any rate, if the new measure be no child of the GOVERNOR'S, if the harsh and repressive measures which have been carried out by the police are not in any particular sense pet measures of his own, the members of the Council cannot have any reluctance in voting against the Bill or condemning the acts of the police in their speeches.

By the Carnatic yesterday six Police sergeants from London, arrived to join the force here. It is supposed they are to be promoted to the same rank as the present inspectors as they have been billeted off in the same quarters.

Mr. Mercer and the St. Andrew's Club.

At the Hongkong Club on Saturday afternoon, an Address was presented to the Honorable W. T. Mercer, as President of the St. Andrews' Club from his "Brither Scots," resident in Hongkong, in consequence of his intended departure from the colony. Upwards of fifty gentlemen were present, and the address, which was read by Mr. Henry Murray, was as follows:—

"TO THE HONOURABLE WILLIAM THOMAS MERCER, Esq., &c., &c.

"SIR,—In addressing you upon your approaching departure from Hongkong, we perform a very painful task as well as a pleasant and gratifying duty. It will be with no ordinary feelings of regret that we shall witness the bereavement from the colony of an intelligence which, exercised in the positions of the highest importance, has during three-and-twenty years most materially aided the wonderful development of which Hongkong can boast. We are grieved that our fellow colonists, as well as ourselves shall lose the advantages which your exalted personal character, and clear, unbiassed sense of public duty have so long conferred upon this Government—a deprivation which they deplore as sincerely as we do; but our own loss is aggravated by the fact that we are viewing the withdrawal from amongst us of a fellow Scotsman, who, zealously and faithfully as he has supported and administered Imperial interests, has ever kept the chief place in his heart for the teal kind which gave him birth. We, the Scottish residents of Hongkong, thank you heartily, Sir, for the manner in which you have always used for our benefit, the interest belonging to your distinguished station in the colony. You have always caused us to look back with pride upon the good old stock from which we are sprung; and your example has taught us that the first duty of Her Majesty's subjects is to reflect lustre upon that part of her dominions more peculiarly their own. In common with those around us, we are sorry that we are about to be deprived of that genial courtesy and those social talents which have so largely contributed to the happiness of all your fellow residents, but it will be at the times and seasons when we are accustomed to celebrate together our common nationality as Scotsmen, that we shall more particularly feel your absence. It has been upon these occasions we often brightened by your wit and fancy, that you have especially endeared yourself to us, and in remembrance of them, and of your sway amongst us, we venture to solicit your acceptance of the small testimonial with which we are about to present you. Though, but a humble, it is meant to be an earnest proof of the warm esteem and affection with which we regard you, and which, in after days your eye may rest upon it may serve to remind you that the many years which we passed in this colony, so honorably to yourself, and so beneficially to others did not go altogether unappreciated.

So much for ourselves. Let us now turn the picture and say how glad we are to congratulate you on your return to your native land, and how deeply gratified to find that you close a long and laborious career, not without hope but that, under the Divine blessing you may yet recruit impaired health, and live years in usefulness in some more salubrious climate than we tell your that you carry with you our heartiest good wishes, and that we shall not forget to pray for your prosperity and happiness, nor for the prosperity and happiness of her, whose many feminine excellencies, and whose goodness of heart, tend, now that we are about to lose them, only to heighten the regret which we have endeavoured to express.

D. Hean,

Mr. Mercer rose to reply but a minute or two elapsed before he could sufficiently command his feelings to proceed. At length he said, that a set speech on these occasions was utterly out of placed and the golden rule of brevity was the best that could be observed.

Still the very high compliment paid him must be acknowledged, not as it was felt, but in some way or other and he was satisfied no offence would be taken by his breaking down.

The testimonial which they were kind enough to offer him he regretted to say official rules obliged him to decline, but as the case was, he might say singular private and peculiar, instead of being connected with public business, he did indulge a hope that his strict reading of the Colonial Regulations might be wrong, or that his official superiors might see fit to relax the rule in his favour.

In the meantime his duty was to decline the Testimonial, and he knew that the common sence of Scotchmen would not allow offence to be taken by the generous intenders of the gift.

As regards their very kind compliment to Mrs. Mercer, he was the last to offer any objection to it, and he rejoiced to think that all present were agreed that Mrs. Mercer had occupied her station, even in the highest place, to the promotion of a good understanding, the increase of geniality and the good of the Colony.

He believed that he owed this compliment mainly to the fact that for the past few years he had presided over the annual St. Andrew's Dinner and had done his best to give that festival éclat. At any rate he would always have a very pleasant recollection of his St Andrews' Dinners, and would never forget his "Brither Scots" whom he had met there "In particular" said Mr. Mercer I shall never efface from my memory our meeting of to-day, and while thanking you one and all for your kindly feelings towards me I shall best draw these few remarks to a close in an adaptation of our own ploughman poet's words:

"The bridegroom may forget the bride,
Was made his wedded wife yestreen,
The monarch may forget the Crown,
That on his head an hour has been,
The Mither may forget the bairn,
That smiles sae sweetly or her knee,
But I'll remember you, my friends,
And this that ye has done for me."

Mr. Mercer resumed his seat amidst loud applause and the meeting shortly afterwards separated.

"Who Struck Billy Patterson?"

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "DAILY PRESS."

SIR,—I have carefully perused your leading article of this morning, and unexceptionable as I find it generally, I regret to observe one statement which displays such an apparent want of knowledge of the history of America and the rise of her institutions as to neutralise the many profound truths which are laid down in the preceding paragraphs. Coolly and deliberately, and evidently with malice aforethought, and instigated by the," &c., &c., as old indictments recited, you state:—"There is a cant phrase in America, 'Who struck Billy Patterson?' an destitute of meaning," &c., &c. Destitute of meaning! and yet there are professors of history in British universities! Who can wonder at the decadence of British scholarship and the other signs of mental inferiority pointing incontestably to the advent of that inevitable "New Zealander," when the British youth is allowed to mature in such lamentable ignorance of the history of his gigantic Trans-Atlantic neighbour. List, list, oh! list, while I unfold unto you the true account of the rise and fall of the great Patterson, whose evil fortune inscribed his name in the annals of his country, nor could a more faithful historian be found, inasmuch as quorum pars fui, or, rather, I stood by and "heered the hull."

In the year 1836 a portion of the city of Boston, lying near the wharves, called Broad-street, was inhabited almost entirely by the laboring class of Irish emigrants. There they lived and labored, drank and fought, and indulged in those pleasant pastimes of skull-cracking, limb-breaking, and body-maiming generally, peculiar to the semi-civilized Celt when he indulges in unlimited whiskey with gentlemen of opposite factions. As a general thing, the police of the city found no difficulty in quelling these faction fights, after they considered a sufficient number had been killed to balance the fresh arrivals since the last fight, in order that the balance of population might be preserved. But it happened on one of these "motions" of a larger size than usual, that an alarm of fire was given, and the members of the fire department rushed to the scene of warfare with their "machines," with their usual alacrity. Now these men were all Volunteers, and the very pick of the stalwart, sturdy American mechanics. As soon as they arrived on the field of action, the opposing factions united their arms, or rather skulls, and pitched into the new comers indiscriminately. For some time the fight raged warmly, until out of breath and exhausted, both sides drew off a little distance from each other, and paused for breath. In the space between lay the bodies of the fallen, amongst others, that of William Patterson, Esq., the hero of the legend, with blood pouring freely from a severe wound in the occiput. At that moment a fresh actor appeared on the battle-field in the person of a little, fiery red-haired Irishman, certainly not more than five feet two inches high, but who seemed fairly boiling over with wrath. As he gazed on his prostrate friend lying recumbent on his mother earth (absit Miss Braddon), one spring carried him into the centre of the mêlée, where, shaking with wrath, shaking his fist, and shaking off his "long-tailed-blue" (as the coats of that day were styled) he roared out in a voice hoarse with rage as he fairly danced with passion and excitement, "Who struck Billy Patterson? Show me the man that struck Billy Patterson, till I murder him outright, you cowardly rapparees, which of you struck Billy Patterson?" There was a pause for a moment; no one appeared willing to assume the responsibility of the blow, until Micky, increasing in rage and scarcely able to ejaculate, sputtered out the inquiry once more, when a master blacksmith named Loring, standing fully 6 ft. 10 in. in his boots, and stout in proportion, with an arm like a weaver's beam and a chest like a horse, stepped coolly forward, and biting a huge quid from a hand of tobacco, replied, "I hit him, Micky; hev you anything to say agin it?" Micky made one step forward, paused, measured the inches of his gigantic opponent with his eye, took another half step forward, hesitated, looked again at his bleeding friend, one more glance at Loring, stooped down, picked up his coat, and putting it under his arm, remarked in a quiet tone, "Dead, then, but it was a heavy crook ye gev him." The change from the ferocious tone of Micky's first address to the quiet submission to fate conveyed in the latter remark, was so irresistibly comic, that a burst of laughter rose from both sides, in the midst of which I felt a sharp cut across the shoulders, and looked up to meet the threatening eye and uplifted cane of my respected parent, who, remarking, "Hooking Jack, etc.," seemed disposed to continue his remonstrance so out of consideration for him, I left.

From that day forth, this expression, "Who struck Billy Patterson?" passed into a proverb in the good city of Boston, more commonly known among curious New Yorkers and malignant Philadelphians, as the hub of the universe." And, whenever a man attempted to bluster upon any occasion, and being met calmly but firmly, backed down from the position he at first assumed, he was invariably met by the cutting inquiry, "Who struck Billy Patterson."

AMERICUS VESPUCCIUS.

Hongkong, 4th May, 1867.

Police Intelligence, May 3rd.

BEFORE E. W. GOODLAKE, ESQ.

BURGLARY.

Lee-a-yow, unemployed, was charged with burglariously entering a mat-shed, and attempting to steal sundry articles of clothing.

Lee-a-sam, stated that he was a stone-cutter, and lived in a mat-shed on the Praya West. At about half past two this morning, he woke up and saw the prisoner removing some clothes from his bed. Witness jumped up and seized him by the tail which prisoner attempted to cut and escape, but was stopped by a constable who had heard the disturbance.

Indian Sergeant Fustula Khan, No. 276, at half past two this morning while on duty at West Point, heard cries proceeding from a mat shed, and also saw prisoner running from the place. He arrested him and took him back to the shed where he was recognised as the man who had broken into the place.

Prisoner had nothing to advance in his defence, and was fully committed for trial at the Supreme Court.

UTTERING COUNTERFEIT COIN.

Wong-a-cheong, pawnbroker, Queen's Road, was charged with uttering counterfeit coin.

Chun-a-yee, chair coolie, stated that yesterday morning at about seven o'clock, he pawned some clothing at the prisoner's shop, and received a Hongkong dollar, (produced). At about 3 P.M., wishing to change this coin, he found it to be counterfeit. He informed a constable who went with him to prisoner's shop, when the latter handed him another dollar in exchange —a Mexican—also bad. The constable then arrested the prisoner.

P.C. 181, deposed to the truth of this statement, and Inspector Payne stated that on sending down to search prisoner's house two other bad dollars (also produced) had been found.

His worship thought the case presented some difficulty on account of the fine that had elapsed before prosecutor returned the dollar. He thought the evidence was sufficient to justify him in sending the case for trial to the Supreme Court, and would take that course and let a jury decide on the merits. At the same time, as prisoner appeared to be a respectable man, he would admit him to bail on his own surity of $100 and two others of $50 each.

BEFORE N. R. MASSON, ESQ., MAY 4TH.

A couple of man-of-war's men, picked up drunk in the streets last night, were discharged, the punishment of being locked up all night being deemed sufficient.—Another, a darky, was fined $2, for making a row in a brothel, and striking one of the inmates. Two street-gamblers were then fined $2 or to be imprisoned for seven days; and four boatmen $1 each, for assaulting and beating the people of another boat, who were more successful than themselves in obtaining a fare.

ANOTHER RECEPTACLE FOR STOLEN GOODS.

Mak-a-fong, marine stove dealer, Queen's-road West, was charged with being in unlawful possession of a new padlock, the property of H. M. Government, it having been stolen from an outhouse attached to No. 3 Police Station.

It appeared that this lock—a common iron padlock—had been stolen some month or so ago, when it was left hanging for a few minutes on the clasp of the door to which it belonged, while one of the constables went inside. It was identified by several constables staying in the station by some dents and other marks, and there was not the slightest doubt but that prisoner had purchased the lock knowing it to have been stolen. He was accordingly fined $25, or to be imprisoned for one month with hard labour.

ANOTHER ROBBERY FROM THE ABERDEEN DOCK.

Chan-a-lock, carpenter employed in the Aberdeen Dock, was charged with stealing some composition nails from the Aberdeen Dock.

The case was similar to that of yesterday, the prisoner having been arrested by the watchman as he was going home in dinner, with the nails produced stowed away in the waistband of his trowsers.

His Worship wished to know, if it was customary for workmen to carry home nails with them when they went dinner, and hearing that such a course was not customary, asked a few more equally sensible questions, which did not alter the fact that prisoner had been caught leaving the yard with the nails in his possession, which he certainly had no right to have. These facts being fully proved, prisoner was committed to gaol for twenty-one days with hard labour.

A CASE OF SUSPENSION.

Cheong-kook-chai, Cheong-a-ting, and Chun-a-suey, three stonemasons, employed at West Point, were charged with seizing Chun-a-tack, a fellow workman, tying his hands behind him, and running him up to a beam, in a house in Queen's-road West, at about seven o'clock this morning.

Chun-a-tack stated that prisoners lived in the same house with himself. This morning they suddenly seized hold of him, lashed his hands behind his back, and hoisted him up to a beam in the room. They kept him suspended for some little time, and then lowered him down and released him. Prosecutor showed his wrists swollen and red from the effects of the lashing that had been round them. He said that the reason why prisoners treated him so was that, they accused him of stealing their clothes and bedding.

Prisoners acknowledged to having tied prosecutor up because he stole a blanket from one of them, and did so because they were afraid he would run away, and so escape punishment. They were told that they had no business to take the law into their own hands and treat a man in such a cruel manner, and were fined $2 each.

AN UNLICENSED EMIGRANT HOUSE.

Hang-hai-on, shopkeeper, Bonham Strand, was charged by C. J. Smith, Esq., Registrar General, with breach of Ordinance 22 of 1858, in keeping emigrants on his premises, the same being unlicensed for that purpose.

Mr. Smith said that this was a case in which he must press for a very heavy penalty. Prisoner had been repeatedly sent for to come to his office and register his house in a proper manner, but had refused to do so. He had also been made acquainted with the consequence of his refusal. There were forty-two emigrants staying on prisoner's premises, and had been for the past ten days. It would be impossible to carry out the gist of this, or any ordinance, unless heavy penalties were enforced in cases like the present, and in this instance he must press for the very heaviest penalty allowed by law to be inflicted.

Prisoner coolly acknowledged to the truth of the statement made by the prosecution, and did not seem to think it anything at all outrageous to brave the law in the manner he had done, and as a gentle reminder, he was fined $50, or to be imprisoned for six weeks with hard labour.

Government Notices.

(From the Gazette.)

It is announced that in future all public offices in Hongkong except the General Post office, are to close at half past one o'clock on Saturday.

Edward Wallace Goodlake Esq. Police Magistrate, is gazetted as having entered on the duties of his office.

The usual summer notice to masters of vessels in the harbor requiring them to move over to the Kowloon side, is issued by the Harbor-Master.

A Diplomatic Grievance.

The following amusing anecdote is going the round of the diplomatic circles on the continent:—Count Kolf, the Minister of Wurtemberg at the Court of Rome, is not over wealthy, and has but one horse to his carriage. The Pope, who is aware of his circumstances, allowed the Wurtemberg Minister to enter the Vatican in his one-horse vehicle, although etiquette requires a carriage drawn by two horses at least. Herr von Kolf, again, the Prussian Minister, who possesses a splendid horse and phaeton which he drives himself, thought he could do what was permitted to his colleague of Wurtemberg. But the guard before the Vatican roundly refused to admit his "one horse shay"—two horses being the right thing. Herr von Arnim at once wrote to Cardinal Antonelli demanding an explanation, and provisionally breaks off diplomatic relations with the Holy See. Our Florence correspondent learns that the feud has assumed vast and alarming proportions. He writes:—"The case of 'Arnim versus Antonelli' seems likely to become quite a serious matter. The Prussian Envoy Extraordinary has ceased to call upon the Cardinal Secretary of State, and sits at home, in an attitude of offended dignity, awaiting an apology. The diplomatic corps in Rome naturally espouses their colleague's quarrel, blame the Vatican for stubbornness, and are at a loss to understand that Antonelli should not yield to Prussia, Sua Eminence boisse, more than one has been heard to say. His suspected, however, that his Eminence has availed of this opportunity to revenge himself on Count Bismark, in the person of his agent, for having ruined the hopes of the Pope with regard to Prussian intervention in Roman affairs and for having then disappointed him. Prussia, you may remember it was proclaimed, was to be the new and zealous protector of the Pontifical State when France should have removed her banner and abandoned her charge. But France went, and Prussia did nothing. Hinc illæ lacrymæ, or, more properly to speak, hence these bickerings about bronglinns, and this little comedy in which a Cardinal, a Prussian diplomatist, and a Swiss sentry, who is an Austrian, are the three dramatis personæ. A fourth there might have been in the person of the Ambassador, who enjoys the valuable and exclusive privilege of entering the Vatican's courts with a single quadruped. With respect to Baron Arnim's grievance, the impression I derive from my letters from Rome is that the Pope, upon reflection, will think it best to keep good terms with Prussia, and that probably Antonelli will have to "knock under."

Masks and Faces.

An ingenious German (says the Pall Mall Gazette) is now showing at the Egyptian Hall, Piccadilly, what wonders can be wrought by putting your face into training, and by a scientific arrangement of lights and shadows. He may have been more favored by nature in respect of certain facial lines than the generality of men, but he has evidently seconded nature by assiduous employment of art. Such perfect mastery over his face has he established that he appears also to be several single gentlemen, as unlike one another as possible, rolled into one. The entertainment, of which of course the jungle of a pianoforte is indispensable, is divided into four parts. When the curtain first rises there is "discovered" a stage wherein is a long table, on either end of which is erected a sort of rampart; on each rampart is a candlestick of five branches; in the end of each branch is lighted a candle; on each of two side shelves are three more lighted candles; and behind each rampart is concealed what the entertainer could better explain than anybody else. On the centre of the table, between two ramparts, is a small mirror with its back towards the spectators, and on each side of the mirror is a movable gun jet, shaded from the spectators by what looks like a piece of tin in the shape of an oyster-shell. Of these jets the entertainer makes much use in lighting up his contortions of face. From the centre of the table also springs up from time to time a screen behind which the entertainer hides himself whilst he makes such alterations in his dress and identity as he considers necessary or unbecoming. His entertainment is interspersed with a kind of lecture in which there is no little humour, rendered more piquant and sometimes more unintelligible than it would otherwise be by the entertainer's quiet, occasionally almost puritanical manner, and foreign pronunciation of our language. For instance, it is half a moment before one recognizes in what sounds to the ear "hees art ees in hees preacher's pocket," the common saying, "his heart is in his breeches' pocket." The first part of the entertainment consists of a representation by means merely of masterly command over the face, a black coat, and a white waistcoat of about twelve different types of men, to wit, the melancholic, the "sanguinious," the choleric, the sanctimonious (in which the performer is eminently successful), the cynical, the proud (in which the performer seems to have taken for his model the supercilious waiter at a railway hotel), the humble, the learned, the simpleton, the misanthrope, or "man-eater," and the genial. The entertainer concludes this part by a display of such power over his face as to lead to the hypothesis already made that he could take it off as easily as he would take off his hat. The second part is devoted to the beard (the term including all hair worn on the face); and the manner in which by means of shadows only the "manly growth" is imitated is particularly clever. The names, however, given to the different styles of beard do not seem, except in one or two cases, to be strikingly appropriate. The "homeman beard" and the "courting beard," for example, are surely arbitrarily so called; it must be admitted, however, that they are such as would leave the lips tolerably free. Nor did it seem to to within the resources of the entertainer's art beforthandsor the favourite "weepers." The third part consisted of an exhibition of portraits from the entertainer's album. This was received with great favour; but the representation of the "mother-in-law" seemed to take better with the young than the middle-aged ladies. This sort of exhibition (but not so well done) was to be seen at the last Dramatic College. Fête. The fourth and last part was the most wonderful, and really amounted to a scientific display. For by means of light and shadow alone, so far as complexion, beard, and expression were concerned (appropriate costume being in each case adopted), the entertainer transformed himself into an admirable likeness of an Arab, a Highlander, a Chinaman (having the peculiarity of the eyes to a marvel), a negro, a British tar, and probably several other public characters. It is almost superfluous to add that it must be for distance which lends enchantment to the view.

Extracts.

The Irish Rebellion of 1798.*

(From the "Saturday Review".)

There is unfortunately an obvious propriety in the present appearance of a new edition of Mr. Maxwell's History of the Irish Rebellion of 1798. The book is chiefly interesting as containing a certain quantity of original details. The story is indeed a very difficult one to tell, for the rebellion was a succession of violent explosions at a number of places with little connexion or unity of plot, and each explosion has the strongest possible likeness to all the others. The outbreak, which was finally suppressed at Vinegar Hill, lasted for a month. The insurgents gained several decided successes, which, it is true, were due to rashness and imbecility on the part of the Royal commanders. Two or three small detachments were cut to pieces, owing to an imprudent attack upon huge armed mobs. At Tubbereering, Colonel Walpole managed to get a body of dragoons, artillery, and infantry into a deep lane between high enclosures, which served effectually to conceal a rebel ambush. At Oulart, a detachment of one hundred and twenty militiamen attempted to storm a hill guarded by four or five thousand rebels. They were apparently successful, and the rebels dispersing in every direction. The fight, however, was led by a characteristic inversion of affairs: the rebels were suddenly told that a number of cavalry were approaching to attack them, of whose extraordinary powers they had a most exaggerated idea. They became immediately convinced that running away was useless, and that they must either conquer or perish: whereupon they turned upon the militia, and "charging them with their pikes, killed the whole detachment in an instant, except the lieutenant-colonel, a sergeant, and three privates." This truly Irish combination to an engagement could only be brought about by an unusually felicitous combination. The militia, however, were beaten on two or three other occasions, and were compelled by the sheer pressure of overwhelming numbers to abandon Wexford and most of the surrounding district. If their commanders had shown any ability, Mr. Maxwell mentions that they might have marched successfully on Dublin. In the attack upon Ross they are said to have mustered 25,000 men, and fought with great resolution for ten hours. The force which held the town consisted of 1,400 men, chiefly militia, with a few dragoons and artillerymen. They professed to have killed 2,500 of their assailants—an estimate which we may assume to be liberal—and certainly had a very severe struggle. At Arklow, again, it is said that the rebel force amounted to 31,000. In short, although the rebels were everywhere a totally unprovided and undisciplined mob, they were almost enabled to crush the scattered forces of veomanry opposed to them by the dead weight of numbers. Meanwhile, the ferocity with which both sides behaved made the war atrocious, one of extermination.

Thus, at the beginning of the rising an attack made upon Carlow was disastrously repulsed, and it was calculated that at least six hundred of the assailants were killed without the loss even of a wounded man to the loyalists. Immediately after this "bloodless victory," as Mr. Maxwell calls it from the victorious point of view, two hundred men were hanged or shot by martial law, including an unlucky baronet at whose house the rebels had assembled, apparently without his consent or assistance. Soon afterwards, a large body of insurgents met together in order to surrender. One of them foolishly fired off his gun in the air before delivering it up. According to another account, some of them actually fired upon the King's troops. At any rate the result was that "ample vengeance was soon obtained, for above three hundred and fifty of the rebels were killed." The spirit exhibited in these events was naturally catching. The rebels went about burning and murdering, and the yeomanry and troops retorted by hanging and shooting. Every success on either side was followed by a massacre. The rebels of course went furthest in this pleasing connexion, though it is difficult to say which side was most to be blamed. The most terrible events were the massacre at Scullabogue and the executions at Wexford. Over two hundred prisoners, besides women and children, were massacred at Scullabogue, being either burned in the barn or cut down and shot outside. At Wexford there was a repetition on a small scale of the worst scenes of the French Revolution. Ninety-seven prisoners are said to have been massacred; the general mode of putting them to death was that "two men pushed their pikes into the breast of the victim and two in his back; and in that state (writhing with torture) they held the suspended till death, and threw him over over the bridge into the water." As Protestants grew scarce, it is said, they were kept longer in torture, and "scourged with lashes made of brass wire and twisted in whimcord;" and various other atrocities are recorded which we may hope to be at least exaggerated. Four hundred Protestants are said to have been massacred in Enniscorthy and on Vinegar Hill, and left unburied for several days. When order was restored, these cruelties were of course retaliated. The North Cork regiment had the credit of inventing the "pitch cap" torture. When a "croppy" was found, he was immediately brought to the guardhouse, where caps of canvas linen smeared inside with pitch were kept ready for service. One of these was well heated and pressed upon the head of the unlucky croppy, and when it was too cool to be easily pulled off, he was turned out amidst the laughter of his tormentors. This little illustrative anecdote is perhaps a better indication of the prevalent spirit than even the records of hangings, with the obsolete mutilations appropriate to treason, and of the shootings, house-burnings, and dragooning of the unlucky peasantry. Heads weroized upon the gateways of Wexford by a certain Sergeant Dunn, who was also the fruitful inventor of stripping off the clothes of each sufferer the moment the body was cut down, in the presence of the next victim, and tying them up ready for sale. Sir Jonah Barrington gives a still more singular account of the performances of a certain "Lieutenant H." who was a tall powerful man, and accustomed to act as an amateur executioner, standing for the gallows himself, and using his own cravat in the place of a rope.

The details of these atrocities are repulsive enough, though they are by no means unparalleled in similar cases where both sides have been frightened or irritated out of humanity. The dangers of the time, when we were engaged in the revolutionary struggle and the landing of a French army might have been anticipated at any moment, are of course the main excuses. But the dangers themselves were increased by the slowness and indecision of the movement of the Royal commanders. At that time, when the means of communication were so defective, it was of course impossible to bring the weight of the central power to bear so rapidly, and any insurrection was of necessity far more dangerous. It has every chance of coming to a head long before an overwhelming body of troops could be marched over bad roads and difficult mountains to encounter it. But the movements seem to have been necessarily dilatory, after making every allowance. The French force of 1,400 men, which landed under Humbert, was permitted to move about the country and to win a battle, till Lord Cornwallis could slowly collect an army of 30,000 men to crush it. The attack upon Vinegar Hill was carefully and slowly arranged according to all the forms of war, in the apparent hides of patching the whole body of insurgents. It is well that they were able to escape by an accidental failure of the dispositions, for we were probably spared the disgrace of a cruel massacre. But a little more energy might have stamped out a rebellion at once which never gained a temporary success except by the gross carelessness of the officers opposed to it. The whole history may be taken to prove two or three useful morals, which should not be forgotten—such as that hesitation in dealing with the commencement of a rebellion may lead to the necessity of far greater severity afterwards, and—what is more apt to be forgotten—that unnecessary cruelty is very apt to provoke more than it deters: for the shame of beginning the disgraceful atrocities in question seems to rest with the officers who dealt with the first outbreak. We may hope that such lessons are now needless, especially as it is plain that no insurrection in our day can have a tenth part of the chances of that of 1798.

REDUCTION
In the rates of premium for FIRE INSURANCE.

THE Undersigned have (as already intimated in their Circular dated 14th October last,) received authority from the Secretary of the Royal Insurance Company to reduce the rate of Premium under certain circumstances, on private residences and on Furnitures and effects therein contained.

In case of Dwelling Houses removed from the town the rate of premium will be three-quarters per cent. in place of one per cent. per annum as hitherto charged, and in cases of Residences so situated being detached or semi-detached the rate will be further reduced to one-half per cent.

The Royal's annual rates for Fire Insurance on the various classes of Buildings and their contents will therefore remain as follows until further notice, viz:—

Detached and semi-detached Dwelling Houses (removed from the town) and their contents.	¼ per cent.
Other Dwelling Houses (similarly situated) and their contents	¾ per cent.
Offices and Godowns and their contents.	1 per cent.
First Class China Houses and their contents.	1½ per cent.

VICTORIA PHOTOGRAPHIC GALLERY.
No. 62, Queen's Road Central.

THE Undersigned have much pleasure in announcing the opening of their PHOTOGRAPHIC GALLERY, on MONDAY next, April 8, 1867, and until further notice from 10 A.M. to 3 P.M.

To meet the wishes of the community generally, a Waiting Room has been furnished with every necessary requisite, consistent with a first class Establishment, including foreign and local papers.

A Glass Studio on a new and improved principle, has been constructed at a great expense, for the purpose of obtaining a better illumination, consequently, a rapid impression of the latent image and a more natural expression, which cannot be obtained by long sittings: the following inventions, will for the first time be introduced into this Colony, the MIRROR-TYPE MEDALIONS, ENAMELLED PROCESS, &c., &c.,
